EUROPEAN HERITAGE DAYS 2012

On Saturday, September 29th and Sunday, September 30th, 2012 Italy will celebrate the European Heritage Days, an initiative established by the European Council to encourage the development of the cultural heritage of its various members and to underline the common cultural roots of Europe.

Roma Capitale, Assessorato alle Politiche Culturali e Centro Storico - Office of the Superintendent of Cultural Heritage, in synergy with the Ministry of Culture Heritage and Activities (MIBAC) will participate in this great European-wide celebration with free admission to museums and historic monuments and a program of guided tours and lectures.

Lead by the directors and curators of the museums themselves, the public will be encouraged to discover the richness and diversity of the patrimony of Roma Capitale through its masterpieces which recount a period that spans from antiquity up to the 20th century.

The guided tours of the museums and sites around the city will highlight some of Rome's rich patrimony of art and architecture from new and unusual perspectives. For this occasion museums such as the Museo di Villa Vecchia in Villa Doria Pamphilj and a number of archaeological sites which are not generally open to the public will be available for visits. These include the Tomb of the Scipios and the Insula romana of the Ara Coeli, both examples of constructions from Imperial Rome

At the Museo Napoleonico, in connection with its current exhibition, one of the curators of the exhibit will lead a guided tour of the Maps of Italy of Bacler d'Albre 1798-1802, a series of six maps dedicated to the Napoleonic campaigns.
